High Five. . .

and other Phrases, Titles, Product Names, and Exaggerations Constructed with Numbers

Numbers are a vital commodity. Our lives are constructed around them, They are, for instance, at the heart of buying and selling, skyscraper building, schedules, and properly fitting shoes. The list is enormous!

In addition to their counting and measuring jobs, numbers have also created careers for themselves as part of our everyday language where they take on whole new personalities.

Some add volume to our figures of speech,
(Instead of, "It doesn't matter," we quip,
"It's six of one and half a dozen of another.")

Others appear in titles of stories and in children's counting rhymes,
(Thirty days hath September, April, June, and November.)

Business-minded digits serve as important parts of product names,
(7-Up)

Some numbers bolster the human tendency to exaggerate.
(There must be a million examples!)

Here are 40 of them.

Use the clues to identify the missing numbers. Write them in the blanks to the left.
